P&H Interiors Creates Stunning
Designs That Are Actually Livable

Question: When did you first realize that you had an interest in interior design?

Answer: Growing up in a family of builders, I was always exposed to the perception of how floor plans affect function, and how architecture and creativity should merge together to create the mood for the space. It's a fascinating concept that I explore each and every day through interior design.

Question: How did you start building your way in the business?

Answer: As newlyweds, my husband Kevin and I began building custom homes. I enjoyed putting the finishing touches on the interiors, and by doing so received accolades and requests from several people seeking assistance with their own residences. I just seemed to have a knack and I enjoyed doing it so much that, to this day, it hardly seems like work at all.

Question: What is the philosophy and inspiration for your designs?

Answer: My philosophy is simply to design dynamic spaces that are as functional as they are beautiful. With that said, the inspiration for our furnishings always stems first from the client's needs and preferences. We then take that information and offer designs that will best reflect their personal style and function within the space.

Question: Why is P&H Interiors unique?

Answer: I feel the greatest strength and quality at P & H is our teamwork. Many of us have worked together for almost 20 years, and each member of our team brings a special area of expertise to every project.

The goal at P&H Interiors is to help clients realize their vision beyond anything they may have imagined and to create the right feeling for their home. "P&H stands for Personalized and Harmonized — the inspirational backbone of every design we create," says Susan Connor, President of P&H Interiors. "Personalized for the individual client and harmonized to reveal the true beauty of the space, both visually and emotionally."

Just as a painter applies colors, hues and a blending of brushstrokes to a canvas, interior design creates the transformation of a space to invoke the emotions and personality of the client, be it soft and subtle, or bold and dynamic. "The trick is to reveal the unexpected, bringing delightful results that could not have been imagined before," Connor says.
